

THE TOOLKIT

The Worry Jar

Get the worries out of your head and into a jar. Then sort them honestly.
Most of what keeps you up at 3am turns out to be one of only three things.

- 1 Write it down. Every worry, big or silly, goes on the jar page. One per line. Do not argue with it yet, just empty your head.
- 2 Sort it. Next to each worry, mark one of three: Do, Think or Drop. Be honest. If you are not sure, it is probably a Think.
- 3 Keep going for a week. Use the weekly log on the last page. The worries that keep coming back are the ones telling you something.

DO

It needs action

These will not solve themselves. A call to make, a bill to sort, a conversation you keep dodging. If the same worry lands in your jar all month, it belongs here. Pick the first small step and book it.

THINK

It needs understanding

Action only helps a bit. A doctor visit calms health worry, until the next twinge. These ask why they keep getting to you. Spend ten honest minutes on that why.

DROP

It is not yours to carry

Things you cannot control, unlikely events, the maybes. They do not need solving. They need letting go, as many times as it takes.

A NOTE BEFORE YOU START

This is a reflection tool, not therapy and not a diagnosis. If worry is taking over your days or your sleep, please talk to your GP or a qualified professional as well. And if you want a hand sorting the stubborn ones, that is exactly what a session is for.

TIP FROM THE COACHING CHAIR

A worry that lives in your head feels huge. The same worry written in a jar, on a line, with a letter beside it, usually shrinks to a size you can actually deal with.

Date

Write every worry in here. One per line. Do not edit yourself.

● D = Do
 ● T = Think
 ● X = Drop
 Mark the letter next to each worry.

ONE WEEK

What kept coming back?

Fill this in as the week goes. At the end, look at the Do column. That is where your next move lives.

END OF THE WEEK

Which worry showed up the most, and which column is it in?

What is the one small thing you will do about it this week?
